

Alina Ganea – Gina Necula

Mobile Communication – A New Type of Discourse?

Due to latest technological progress, mobile communication has come to constitute a very wide means of interacting, having as major attributes: low costs, concise phrasing, immediate feed-back in spite of wide distances, etc. Our paper aims at giving a description of this type of discourse comparing it to the oral and written instances of communication and pointing out the profile of a new discursive category.

Both authors are Junior Lecturers at the Romanian University "Dunarea de Jos", Galati